My Defining Moment

“Projects fail because of context, not content.”

(Thomsett, Radical Project Management, 2002, p37)

Triple Constraint

Team Members

- Single view of work required
- Time tracking allows status to be sent and shows proof of utilization
- Reduction of meetings
- Games that we play can stop!

Resource Managers

- Single view of capacity vs. demand
- Data is provided to show need to balance the triple constraint
- Data to show resources working outside of their intent

Executives

- True on-demand reporting....beyond what you really think!
- No more top-down questions faced with rolled-up answers.
- Single version of the truth
- Metrics that are only limited by your imagination.

Project Managers

- A chance to bring value by truly allowing the process to occur.
- Real time updates allows for forward communications instead of backwards communications.
- Proof of need for time, budget, and resources.
- True what-if analysis bringing sophisticated risk analysis

What's In It For Me?

- Executives – Real time access to all information
- Resource Managers – Balanced resources
- Project Managers – Real estimates and updated statuses
- Team Members – Fewer meetings, recognition for work completed, better work/life balance
